Miller & Rhoads --- "The Shopping Center"

Doing the Unusual

Most men boast of their mechanical ability, but it takes a woman to sharpen a lead pencil with a pair of scissors.

The great scientific discoveries of the world can be traced to awakened realization of the significance of simple facts. For instance, many people had seen suspended objects swing to and fro, but Galileo was the first to see with the eye of intelligence. When he was 18 years of age he noticed that when a verger in the Cathedral at Pisa had replenished (with oil) a lamp which hung from the ceiling, he left it swinging, and, looking at it, Galileo conceived the idea of applying it to the measurement of time. He worked on the idea fifty years before he completed the invention of the pendulum.

As he worked on this problem he heard of a Dutch spectacle maker who had made an instrument which caused distant objects to appear much nearer at hand. Galileo brought his mind to bear on the phenomenon, and the result was the telescope—the development of which has given us all we know of the wonders of the skies.

When Miller & Rhoads, way back vonder thirty years ago, started out to sell at one price-and mark everything in plain figures. the old Wiseacres said "it can't be done." The continued upward march of "The Shopping Center" has proved that they blazed the trail and successfully led other stores out of the old habit of selling-for-whatever-price-you-couldget, and into the light of fair-dealing and oneprice to all.

Your favorite shopping place has always stood for selling at the lowest price, and marking that price in plain figures.
